Wartburg College invites nominations (including self-nominations) for the Irving. R. Burling Distinguished Professor in Leadership with a preferred starting date of August 2019. The successful nominee will be an outstanding scholar and teacher of the theory and practice of leadership and will be engaged with vocational discernment as described below. The successful nominee will direct the Institute for Leadership Education, will contribute to teaching in the leadership program and elsewhere and will champion the college's missional focus on vocation.

Our mission: Wartburg College is dedicated to challenging and nurturing students for lives of leadership and service as a spirited expression of their faith and learning.

Statement on Vocation: Wartburg College helps students discover and claim their callings – connecting their learning with faith and values, their understanding of themselves and their gifts, their perspective on life and the future, and the opportunities for participating in church, community and the larger society in purposeful and meaningful ways.

Wartburg defines Leadership as "Taking responsibility for our communities, and making them better through public action." See: <http://www.wartburg.edu/leadership>. Community is broadly defined as, "life in association with others." Most people are members of multiple communities simultaneously. Understanding the relationship of one's role in various communities is critical for personal satisfaction and effective leadership.

QUALIFICATIONS:

Required:

- A terminal degree in a relevant discipline or equivalent tested experience. Practitioners of leadership from outside academia are encouraged to apply.

- An ability to communicate the value of leadership as a discipline.
- A commitment to the mission of Wartburg College, and the ability to further the mission on campus and in the world.
- An approach to vocation aligned with the mission of the college.
- Relevant teaching experience and evidence of an established record of academic publications or the potential to contribute to the scholarship of leadership.
- Promise of continued scholarly prominence.

Preferred:

- Demonstrated experience working with non-profit and other organizations in a service-learning/experiential learning context.
